

Our Cover Story

Our bulletin cover this week features The Angelus by Jean-François Millet (October 4, 1814 – January 20, 1875). He was a French painter and one of the founders of the Barbizon school in rural France. Millet is noted for his scenes of peasant farmers and he can be categorized as part of the naturalism and realism movements.

The painting was commissioned by Thomas Gold Appleton, an American art collector who was based in Boston, Massachusetts, and who had previously studied with Barbizon painter, Constant Troyon, a friend of Millet's. It was completed during the summer of 1857. Millet added a steeple and changed the initial title of the work, Prayer for the Potato Crop to The Angelus when the purchaser failed to take possession in 1859.

Displayed to the public for the first time in 1865, the painting changed hands several times, increasing only modestly in value, since some considered the artist's political sympathies suspect. Upon Millet's death a decade later, a bidding war between the US and France ensued, ending some years later with a price tag of 800,000 gold francs. The disparity between the apparent value of the painting and the poor estate of Millet's surviving family was a major impetus in the invention of the droit de suite, intended to compensate artists or their heirs when works are resold.

This Labor Day, honor the holiness of labor, a theme that surfaces consistently across spiritual traditions, and is especially important to recognize in the midst of tough economic times.

Work is sacred because it is a manifestation of the divine work through humans in the world. Human dignity must be honored in work, work should be compensated justly, and workers should work honestly and with integrity. (Wikipedia, 2015).

Lord, support us all day long, until shadows lengthen, evening comes, the busy world hushed, the fever of life is over and our life's work is done.

Then, in Thy tender mercy, give us safe lodging, holy rest and everlasting peace at Your side for eternity.
Amen.
